The danger of this policy is obvious.

In our report of the speech of the Hon. J. A. Porter, there was a mistake which we are requested by Mr. Porter to correct. The report made him say that the placing of lead on the free list would not reduce the price. This was incorrect and as a matter of justice we give what Mr. Porter said—substantially. "The average price received by the smelters of the state for lead is ninety dollars a ton. The present duty is forty dollars a ton. Lead cannot be imported from a foreign market at the present price for less than seventy dollars a ton, if the duty on lead is twenty dollars a ton. The present duty on lead is forty dollars. The Mills bill proposes to reduce that duty to twenty dollars. This reduction is not sufficient to allow the foreign lead to come into this country so that it can be sold under twenty five dollars or at four and three fourths cents a pound. For this reason the reduction of the duty on lead could not affect the price which the producers of lead receive. The reduction only injures the lead combinations which raise the price to ten cents after they have bought up in advance all lead from the smelters. Any advance in price of lead beyond four and a half cents does not go to the miners or the smelters in this state, but to combinations which make a corner on lead after they have bought the products of the mines from the smelters in advance of production."
